Andy Elskamp

I was born in Lyndhurst and educated at Queen Elizabeth's Hospital School in Bristol and in 1987 went straight into a career in Financial Services, heading up a team at NatWest Insurance Services, responsible for the print and production of corporate marketing material and third party promotions for all the major insurance companies.

In 1993 I moved into an advisory role with London Life specialising in investment and Inheritance Tax planning advice, followed by 9 enjoyable years with Friends Provident, advising clients and running Inheritance Tax Planning Seminars on behalf of the Bristol office and many of the other offices throughout the South and South West of England.

I now live in Clevedon just outside of Bristol with my wife Sarah, who is a teacher, and between us we have 6 boys, including twins aged 2. On the very odd occasion that I do have any free time my real passion is fishing, although my boys would always question whether you can call it fishing if you don't actually bring any fish home!

For the last 12 years I have worked as an Independent Financial Adviser and continue to enjoy developing a very personal relationship with all of my clients and their families, some of whom I have now known for over 20 years.
